The only thing that inspires me and makes me want to bring out the best of me is performing. I love to perform and watch others performing as it is always a Cabbaline spring for me. I never neglect a possibility to dig deep into the way of performing a new play or a new song ad for the most part it is the only motivation to get out of bed on Sunday morning.

After a long search for the most appropriate studying program that meets all my needs and offers the best level of intensity and comprehensiveness I set my heart on Northwestern University's Music Theater Certificate Program. One of the main things that attracts me most, is a possibility to participate in many different shows throughout the year and try my hand in grand extravaganzas and small plays and parts in Children's Theatre Tour.

The Program offers a well-thought-out combination of voice and opera performance with the theater program so any graduate of the Program is able to participate in various performance activities from opera and musicals to drama. As a part of Northwestern's family I would like to get a full submersion into the realm of theater and learn all possible aspects of it making sure that I will be more than competent in the theater life and get the most of the opportunities it brings.

I am hugely excited by the possibility to try my hand in a wide range of dance classes from tap to ballet as I dance since I was knee-high to a grasshopper. The courses that the Program offers can reveal all talents and give a chance to reach my potential in dancing.

One of the most important thing about Northwestern is that it is not a conservatory in the conventional sense so here students are able to polish their knowledge in non-art-related subjects. Mine is psychology as I am hugely interested in the brain potential, its perfect performance and what happens when it starts to work imperfectly. Due to my interest I've investigated a lot and now am able to discuss all weird and bizarre ways of treatment of psychological disorders in the asylums of the past.

At Northwestern, I will get a possibility to become versatile and knowledgeable person and the chosen Program gives all opportunities to achieve that – the only thing I have to do it is to do my best and get the most of it and I am already imagine myself thriving in campus and enjoying every moment of studies.
